Within the cannabis plant are more than 100 cannabinoids, including CBD. CBD does not cause a "high," as does THC. Rather, it communicates with the body's endocannabinoid system (ECS), a sophisticated cell-signaling system that controls a range of physiological functions, including as hunger, mood, pain perception, and immunological response.

Endocannabinoids, enzymes and receptors make up the ECS. All throughout the body exist the two main receptors, CB1 and CB2.
